

Swings and Roundabouts

Over the last year or so, Things have been becoming increasingly obvious to me that are making me realise that things are going in circles. From a daily routine, to a weekly one, a commute back and forth around and around again, stopping and starting, breaking down and waiting for the chance to resume at some unknown time. It's chaotic, controlled unsuccessfully by ourselves, and seeming to be being pushed around again by an unseen force. (Enter deity of your choice here)

I started experimenting with the way I can manipulate my camera to catch unusual compositions, by moving it within a space, held by hand onto a flat surface. By searching through the spaces filmed, I found both intrigue in the mystery of the landscape being unfolded, and familiarity of using spaces That mean something to me.
